MARCUS & MYERS, P.A.

Ernest J. Myers

Mr. Myers has served as the Chairman of a Florida Bar Grievance Committee and is familiar with the procedures and options available during the grievance process.

Bar Grievances

Attorneys engaged in the practice of law occasionally find themselves having to respond to a grievance filed against them with The Florida Bar. When this occurs, Marcus & Myers can help.

The initial response to The Florida Bar can often be the most important document in the entire grievance process. It can set the tone and outline the issues for the investigation conducted by a Bar Grievance Committee.

If the initial response demonstrates a complete lack of probable cause, it may bring the grievance process to an end immediately.

Too often, the grieved attorney takes the grievance personally, and responds to the Bar emotionally, without the assistance of counsel. This can be a mistake.

If a Bar Grievance Committee is assigned to investigate the grievance, there are many options available at the Grievance Committee level that can be utilized to protect an attorney's license.

Seeking experienced outside counsel early in the grievance process gives the attorney the benefit of an independent perspective and identification of a full range of options.

By the time there is a finding of probable cause at the Grievance Committee level and the matter has been referred to the Florida Supreme Court for a Disciplinary Proceeding, the opportunities for amicable resolution may be limited.

Most legal professional malpractice insurance policies provide a benefit for legal representation during The Florida Bar Grievance process. This benefit should be used in the event of a grievance to get advice from an attorney familiar with process.

Marcus & Myers stands ready to represent Florida attorneys in what could be the most important case of their careers: the defense of their license to practice law.
